Introduction

The present volume follows the earlier Books in African languages held in the Melville J. Herskovits Library of African Studies, Northwestern University in its organisation, and the principles of description adopted for the former catalogue have been carried through as well, with one change noted below. A catalogue of books printed in the Ethiopic syllabary and following a different organisation will appear later. Together with the materials in NUCAT these three catalogues will provide access to all the books in African languages acquired through the year 2000. There remain two groups of materials in African languages which are accessible only through the card catalogue in Herskovits Library: a few audio recordings kept in with the African language books and a large number of "sample" issues of periodicals filed separately.

Apart from the materials discussed in the next paragraph, the items listed in this catalogue were received during the years 1999-2000. The library provided me with photocopies of the title page and/or cover from which I created the citations. I returned to the library to examine the books themselves, but during my visits I was sometimes not able to locate all of the materials (new materials are regularly sent for preservation treatment); hence the lack of information for some titles. A few of the entries for items which I could not locate in the library were supplemented with information found in the OCLC database.

Like the previous catalogue, items are arranged by language, and within each language, by title. The present work includes a few dozen individual issues of periodicals which are filed in with the African language books but were not included in the earlier catalogue, as well as books in African languages which are kept in a separate "Uncatalogued European language publications" collection. This bulk of this latter collection is comprised of textbooks and educational materials, but it also contains musical scores, comic books, medical and religious publications. Most of these are in European languages but some are in African languages, mostly bilingual and multilingual publications. All of these materials are listed here under the appropriate language(s). Items from the "Uncatalogued European language publications" will include a location note in the citation: (NU: filed in Uncatalogued European language publications-[subject]) The final section of this catalogue—"Multilingual books"—contains one item containing several African and world languages.

As in the earlier catalogue, author and title indexes are provided. Since the number of languages in this list are far fewer than in the main catalogue, and only ten languages in this catalogue were not represented in the earlier one (Bamoun, Denya, Epie, Ha, Noon, Sidamo, Susu, Taabwa, Thimbukushu, Yaoure), I have not included a language index and instead have replaced it with a detailed table of contents. For the choice of name and variant names found in other reference works, please consult the language name index of the earlier catalogue. There is no country index for the same reasons that there is no language index.

The change mentioned above involves the transcription of Mandingo publications in the N'ko script: in the earlier catalogue I tried to transcribe the tone marks while understanding neither the nature of lexical tone nor of grammatical tone. In this list, I thought it best not to transcribe the tone marks. The N'ko titles are given in N'ko followed by a transcription disregarding tone marks. Mandingo books published in the Latin alphabet do not indicate tone so the transcription only follows regular spelling practice.

Another problem with which I grappled unsuccessfully in the earlier catalogue is the inconsistency in the writing of ɓ, d, k, and y in Hausa. Alphabetical order within the main list and in the indices was easy to follow for all the other languages which distinguish between these letters and the "regular" b, d, k, and y, but for Hausa these two sets of consonants are often not distinguished. On the same book the title page and cover title may differ. For those who know Hausa, always providing the proper spelling and indexing thus would be the natural solution; for those who do not know Hausa interfiling would be easiest. Unfortunately, my lack of knowledge of Hausa kept me from recognizing all the instances where 'k' was really 'k̄', so I could not adopt the knowledgeable Hausa speakers' solution; nor could I interfile the Hausa without interfiling all such letters for all languages. Instead of these options, I chose to use 'k̄' when I found it on the item (cover or title page) or even on a different edition of the same title, and 'k' elsewhere. For the sake of consistency I decided to follow the same practice here, and thus the order within both the body of the catalogue and the indexes is—for Hausa titles—perplexing, both for those who know Hausa and for those who do not.

Had I more time to learn Hausa, this deficiency could have been overcome; more time on Mandingo would have allowed me to transcribe tone for the N'ko items; and I am sure there are many other defects which could have been avoided with more time and study. Then the catalogue would not have been ready for another 20 years. In the few weeks since the appearance of the first catalogue I have already had a few errors in the transcription and transliteration of Arabic titles pointed out to me, and have discovered a few errors in other items. One of the most troublesome titles in the earlier catalogue was missing and I could not check the language; it has reappeared and now needs a new language designation. I hope to receive comments and corrections from users of the catalogues after they become available, and at that point an errata list will be compiled and added to the catalogue of Ethiopian languages, which I hope to finish sometime next year. Suggestions or corrections are solicited and should be sent to David Bade at the Regenstein Library, University of Chicago. Donations of books not found in these catalogues may be sent to the Melville J. Herskovits Library of African Studies, Northwestern University, Evanston Illinois.
